Studio contract remains unsigned

Sharon Kubatzky
features/arts editor

Renovation plans for the cable television access studio at UMSL have been temporarily delayed.

American Cablevision officials refused to sign the contract, which states that American will furnish the studio at UMSL with television equipment. As part of the agreement, UMSL would be allowed 25 hours of use of the facility each week.

"This whole thing does not involve UMSL directly," said Kenneth T. Jaskot, director of community programming for American. "UMSL is an affected bystander."

The snag is due to a legal technicality involving American; its regulatory authority, the North Area Cable Television Authority; and the North Area Community Access Board, charged with developing American's access studios.

"The problem is with the wording of the document concerning the cost of studio renovation," Jaskot said. The UMSL studio will cost approximately $15,000 to renovate, according to Jaskot. American and UMSL had planned to split the cost.

Chip Crawford, general manager for the cable company, explained the situation this way:

In American Cablevision's franchise agreement, the company agreed to provide a main facility and up to three access studios, one in Berkeley, one in Ferguson and a third in Normandy. American would provide all the equipment that an operating facility would need. In addition, it would fund NACAB with 1 percent of American's gross revenues, which would allow NACAB to develop and manage access studios.

In 1982, NACTA (the organization made up of representatives from the municipalities served by American) directed the company to activate the Normandy and Berkeley studios. American complied with the demand, and, acting on behalf of the not-yet-formed NACAB, signed the lease and renovated the Berkeley facility, using the money from the 1 percent allocated to NACAB.

Now, some members of the recently formed interim NACAB feel that American should have paid for renovation, instead of taking the money from NACAB.

"There seems to be a lot of disagreement about what American said that 1 percent financing was for," Crawford said. "Our information indicates that our intention never was to pay for renovation."

Jim Fay, chairperson of the speech communication department at UMSL and a member of both NACTA and NACAB, said he feels American is trying to renege on its agreement.

"I think it stinks," he said. "I think American clearly has a responsibility to provide the area governed by NACTA with public access studios. I think they're only trying to save themselves some money."

Jaskot and Crawford agree that until there is clarification as to whose money will be used for renovation, the UMSL contract will probably remain unsigned. NACTA's attorney is going to review the franchise agreement and make a recommendation, Jaskot said. The issue then may or may not go to court.

"Our officials are thinking, 'We're in one stink over here (with the Berkeley studio), so it would be stupid to sign a document that gets us into the same problem,'" Jaskot said. "Although I dislike the fact that the studio is not there, I can't argue with that logic."

Private funds hit a new high

UMSL has set a record for private fund raising in 1982-83. A total of $775,000 was raised, which is a 75 percent increase over 1981-82.

"It's no big deal to have an increase from a zero base," said Walter Hundley, UMSL director of development. "We still haven't scratched the surface. This is because the university hasn't been aggressive in fund raising."

One reason for the university not being aggressive, Hundley says, is that legislative funding for the university has met UMSL's needs until about three years ago. "Since then the appropriated budget has been stagnant," he said, "while operating costs have skyrocketed."

In 1976-77, UMSL raised $78,619 in private funds. Each year after this, Hundley said, an increase in donations has been seen. However, he said he is proud of the 75 percent increase over last year's total. One area Hundley is most proud of is in corporate giving. In 1981-82, major corporations donated $69,787 or 15 percent of the total. In 1982-83, corporations gave $345,415 or 44 percent of the total donations.

Alumni support was only 6 percent of the total or $46,582 in 1982-83. Hundley attributes this mostly to the fact that UMSL is a young university and does not have the large amount of alumni that the other UM campuses have.

"UMSL alumni are fairly loyal," he said. "About 20 percent made a gift. That is not bad compared to the national average on public universities. The average age of our alumni is about 35. They still haven't reached their peak of earning power."

A major fund-raising drive has been planned to begin in the spring of 1984. Hundley said the goal for 1983-84 has been set at $1,130,000, an increase of 100 percent over this year's total.

"I am encouraged by the way things look," he said. "I feel confident that we can meet or exceed this goal. We have not scratched the surface compared to our sister institutions. My personal goal is to catch up with them."

As part of the fund-raising drive, UMSL is in the process of forming a foundation to raise money. The foundation will consist of community leaders and will be governed by a local board of trustees. The board will determine how to invest and spend the money that is raised.

"Sometimes companies feel that if they give money to UMSL it goes directly to (the University of Missouri at) Columbia," Hundley said. "Too much money is going out of St. Louis to other institutions." Hundley said the board of directors would let the companies know that the money would stay at UMSL.

Most of Hundley's contacts come from the Metropolitan Association for Philanthropy. This is a group of the major companies in St. Louis which screens applicants asking for money to be sure their request is legitimate.

"Before launching any kind of campaign in St. Louis, you must have the approval of MAP," Hundley said. "I have called on just about everyone on the list with very gratifying results."

Hundley said that his main goal is to get corporate executives on campus to walk around and see what goes on.

"I am interested in the cultivation of these people," he said. "I want to tell the companies the importance of providing more university-educated personnel to the corporate community in St. Louis. Fund-raising is a fun profession. It is very interesting. The thing I have become best at is knocking on doors to get funds for UMSL."

History books needed now

The UMSL history department has announced that there is a critical shortage of textbooks that are necessary for their American Civilization courses.

Copies of James Neal Primm's "The American Experience" have become scarce due to a dispute with the book's publisher.

Degree requirement started in education

Mary Murphy-Overmann

In a continuing effort to improve both quality and marketability of teachers, the School of Education has implemented a change in degree and certification requirements.

Initiated by the state Board of Education, which develops standards for all state institutions, the change, according to Doris A. Trojack, associate dean of the School of Education, addresses the need of earlier exposure to the classroom for students pursuing teaching careers.

Beginning this fall, education students enrolled in elementary, special and physical education programs who have completed less than 60 hours of course work are now required to take a pre-clinical course. "Introduction to Classroom Teaching" is the new course which meets this requirement.

Nancy Ashford, assistant director of student services and records, said, "Students need to be exposed to the classroom way before student teaching, and this needs to be done in an organized, systematic manner." Trojack specified the benefits of a pre-clinical course:

1. By exposing the student to the classroom, he is able to develop a point of reference for teaching methods courses.
 2. Through this systematic observation, the student can learn firsthand about classroom dynamics and classroom management.
 3. The observation will help force the student to make an informed decision about pursuing a teaching career.
- Ashford added that "Introduction to Classroom Teaching" offers the student a broad range of teaching situations and environments. "Some students," she said, "have never been exposed to certain teaching environments such as community school programs in several districts. This course helps students to identify and develop particular interests in the teaching field."

The course is designed as an observation study with little or no participation by the education student. Students set up their observation times through the Office of Student Services and Records. Later in their program of study, education majors and those seeking teaching certification implement learned teaching skills through student teaching.

Endicott update darkens outlook for '83 graduates

Students planning on graduating in December don't have much to look forward to in terms of employment, according to Joseph Palmer, director of the Career Planning and Placement Office.

"It continues to be fairly gloomy for the 1983 graduates, Palmer said. "1984 graduates might have a better opportunity to find employment.

Palmer bases his opinion on an update of the 1983 Endicott Report, part of which was published in the September issue of the College Placement Council's "Spotlight."

The report, according to Palmer, is based on a representative sampling of corporations. Nationwide, 167 corporations are asked to project their hiring plans for the upcoming year. The last report came out in November of 1982, predicting hiring trends for 1983-84.

Lindquist, associate dean and placement director at Northwestern University in Illinois. Lindquist prepared the update after "It became evident by the middle of the recruiting year that unforeseen changes were occurring in the employment marketplace for college grauates."

The update reported the following trends in hiring:

— Hiring of engineers with undergraduate degrees dropped 35 percent from last spring. The report predicted an 11 percent drop.

— 33 percent fewer liberal arts graduates were hired this past spring. An 11 percent drop was predicted in November.

— Computer science majors did better than predicted. Hiring dropped 11 percent. The prediction called for a 14 percent drop in hiring.

— Engineers with master's degrees were in greater demand than predicted. Hiring went up 5 percent, although the November report predicted a one percent hiring drop.

Though the outlook is not exactly encouraging, the report did say that out of 167 corporations surveyed, 61 expect hiring to increase next year. Also, the hiring of sales and marketing personnel increased 12 percent over last year.

There also has been an increase in the number of companies contacting UMSL in search of graduates to hire immediately, according to Palmer.

He said that he is "modestly optimistic" for 1984. "We're seeing locally a slight but steady increase in the number of corporations signing up for campus interviews," said Palmer.

Grobman planning legal institute

Erik Schaffer
news editor

Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman is presently considering the establishment of a legal studies institute here at UMSL.

Grobman has appointed a committee that is looking into the possibilities now. The committee has met one time this year.

"It would be imprudent to ask to establish a law school here," said Grobman. "There's one at Washington University, Saint Louis University, and Columbia and Kansas City."

Grobman said that there are people in corporate positions, however, who would like to know more about tax law, labor law or environmental law.

"What I'd like to do," Grobman said, "is set up an institute that would provide those kinds of specific courses for non-attorneys, although some lawyers might want to take the courses."

Grobman said that he has been thinking about a program such as this for several years but budget cutbacks have constrained progress. He said that even now such a plan is not worthwhile to implement. "I'd like to get the plans thought through, though, so that if the budget situation does alleviate, we'll be ready to move."

"My original plan was to set up a night law school," said Grobman. "Years ago, Saint Louis University had a night law school, and many of the local attorneys, judges and prosecuting attorneys are graduates of that school."

Grobman said that such a school would be almost impossible to establish at UMSL. "You need a tremendous library, and the expenses are great, if you do it right," Grobman said.

The establishment of a legal institute, however, would not be very expensive, according to Grobman. This is mainly because UMSL already offers some of the courses involved, such as business law and tax law.

Werner Grunbaum, professor of political science and a member of the Legal Studies Committee, said that the establishment of such a program would greatly enhance the pre-law program here. He said that the members of the committee are "unusually enthusiastic" about creating a legal studies institute. "Usually," he said, "you can't get faculty to agree on anything."

BACK FROM THE U.S.S.R.: Elizabeth Clayton, professor of economics, spoke on conditions in Russia last Monday.

Margie Newman

Patriotism high in U.S.S.R

Elizabeth Clayton, UMSL professor of economics, lectured on "The Soviet Union Today: A Report from Moscow State University (Spring, 1983)" Monday in a program sponsored by the Center for International Studies.

During her presentation Clayton discussed subjects ranging from the harsh Moscow winter to the day-by-day experiences of the Soviet people to the activities of a number of artists she met during her visit.

Clayton said that she sensed a strong nationalism in many of the people she met. "There is a constant sense of patriotism in the public life of the university,"

She said that everyone in the country is required to give up a Saturday in April for the state, but that everyone she worked with seemed to enjoy it. A number of women in the Moscow State law faculty, she said, even dressed up for the day even though their assigned task was cleaning a small park.

The nation's sense of patriotism, she said, climaxed with the May Day celebrations the first of that month. Clayton said that she was surprised to see huge, almost building-sized banners hung almost overnight. These patriotic banners, she said, were not only on display in Red Square and other public locations, but even on the dormitory-style hotel where she stayed for part of the semester.

Other aspects of Soviet life, she said, were not always as they are commonly portrayed or as she remembered when she visited the country in the '60s.

She said that, while the Soviet people often have to stand in line for basic items such as food, these lines move rather quickly. "The system was more efficient than I thought it was," she said.

Soviet clothing, she said, is more colorful than it has been in the past, although the low temperatures of the Moscow winter and spring call for many layers of clothing to be worn.

"The Soviet women," she said, "are keenly conscious of style." She said that a number of women asked her about current Western fashions and that some even knew more about them than she did.

Many young people, she said, are particularly interested in things Western.

A group of young Soviet artists she met, for example, were interested in conceptual art, she said, which is officially prohibited by the state. An exhibit she attended was eventually raided, she said, because police considered some of the work pornographic. She described the artist's group's reaction to this as surprised and somewhat naive.

Most of the people she met, Clayton said, had some sort of religious life, although religion is officially discouraged by the state. She said that, especially once her Russian improved and she no longer frequently needed a translator, the people she met were often open with her, even politically.

Clayton's presentation was part of a regular series of lectures sponsored by the Center for International Studies.

Fund established on behalf of Greg Franzen

A fund has been established on behalf of Greg Franzen, the 17-year-old son of UMSL School of Education Dean William Franzen.

The younger Franzen was seriously injured in a diving accident this summer in Wisconsin and is in critical condition in the intensive care unit at St. John's Mercy Medical Center, paralyzed from the neck down and unable to breathe without a respirator. Money from the fund will be used to help defray mounting medical costs for Franzen's care, as well as pay for items not covered by insurance.

Checks should be made out to the Greg Franzen Fund and sent to the Greg Franzen Fund, c/o University Relations, 426 Woods Hall, or to United Missouri Bank of Kirkwood, attention Julia Muller, 426 N. Kirkwood Road, St. Louis, MO 63122.

According to Art MacKinney, one of the fund organizers, "We hope, in some small way, that the support of the University community will help Bill and Elly Franzen and their family through this difficult time. Our hope is to help lighten the tremendous emotional and financial burden on the Franzen family."

Several fund-raising events are being planned. Also, Entertainment '84 Coupon Books are being sold, with the proceeds to benefit the Greg Franzen Fund.

For information about the coupon books, contact Walter J. Cegelka, Behavioral Studies, 553-6094 or 553-5782.

MacKinney hopes that members of the UMSL community will show their support by contributing to the Greg Franzen Fund, and also by attending some of the benefit events which will take place throughout the year.

A committee has been organized to help assist the fund-raising efforts. Members include MacKinney (553-5372), Doris Trojcek (553-5107), Fred Willman (553-5990), Art Smith (553-5782), Bridget Medley (553-6101), Therese Cristiani (553-6083) and Chuck Granger (553-6226).

In addition to contributions, the committee is seeking volunteer support as well as ideas for fund-raising projects. Suggestions include faculty workshops, benefit concerts, and sales of donated items. To volunteer time or ideas, please call one of the committee members.

Changing government?

The defeat of the referendum on organizational representation in the Student Assembly brings with it two messages. One is that there is a small majority of students which feel that organizations deserve to be included in campus government completely, with no restrictions. The other is that the structure of student government seems to be slowly evolving into a new form.

Some students argue that it's a good thing to include the organizational rep into the government. Organizational reps are active in the assembly, have good attendance records, and show a willingness to work on committees. That work is very important, as it will eventually find its way to the assembly floor for final approval and passage. The organizations are made up of students who are indeed concerned about campus life, especially their own interests, but also the situation as a whole.

The debate about their participation and role in student government seemed to be a question of double representation. Were these representatives in fact getting two votes through one representative? Were they serving two constituencies, and if they were, how was it affecting student government for the whole student body?

In the spring of 1983 voters seemed to strenuously object to organizational reps, and asked that they be removed. Last week's referendum was defeated also, during an election in which turnout was pathetically small. It could be that the referendum appeared to be nothing more than a watered down political compromise, because the reps would still be allowed to vote during their committee work, the source of ideas and actions.

Nevertheless, it was defeated, and organizational reps are in student government to stay.

What appears to be happening is that those students who care enough about the campus are getting their chance to improve their environment. People who join organizations like group situations, and realize how effective groups can be in changing things for the better. Improved campus lighting and the student escort program are recent examples of how things have improved for evening students. Our new handicapped facilities are the result of hard work by a few concerned individuals.

Perhaps student government is slowly becoming more of a "Student Organizational Council" than the "UMSL Student Association." We aren't saying that this is a dangerous trend. It's just that if those students who don't belong to groups really do care, they aren't really showing it.

It may be too soon to judge the situation, because the present form of student government seems eager to close the communication gap between students and their elected leaders. The "town hall" meetings, the new suggestion boxes that sprang up, and our new Student Advocate are all signs of an attempt, and the present administration should be applauded.

If the non-group student really believes that there may be double representation, that student has plenty of means to show displeasure. And if student organizations are the only ones that care, the student government may eventually evolve into an "Organizational Council." It's not right, it's not wrong — it is just a possibility. the consequences should be considered.

Parking board not yet in gear

No one needs to look very hard to see that the parking lots on campus are in deplorable condition. The Daily Parking Lot and the lots located closest to Lucas Hall are all badly in need of repair. Traffic flow and the necessary plowing of snow have reduced the lots to beds of gravel. Given the amount of parking lot use and also the amount of money paid for the privilege, it's time that we began to see some improvement of the lots themselves.

It's not as though the situation has been completely ignored. Anyone can drive over to the South campus lots and find glistening black asphalt and fresh sidewalks. But the situation over on the South campus had been critical. There was only gravel down on those lots. They had to be improved. This summer the project was completed, and education majors probably feel relieved that they have good facilities and much better lighting than before.

Nevertheless, it does no good to rest on your laurels. A project like improving parking facilities is an ongoing one, and there hasn't been much going on for the rest of the lots.

UMSL has a committee whose primary job is to study the parking situation. Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman formed the Parking Committee to make recommendations about the parking situation. So far this year, the Parking Committee hasn't even met, and it's time that they began to work.

Part of the long-range planning of the university involves a loop road to ease the traffic flow problems that seem to plague the campus. Under that plan the location of the roads would be necessarily moved, and the shape of these badly damaged lots would be altered. Understandably, trying to start such an enormous project all at once during a time of economic retrenchment would be disastrous.

We aren't calling for the immediate implementation of the plan. But we would like to see some asphalt hit the ground on those lots that aren't drastically affected by the plan.

Part of the reasoning behind this are the parking conditions that the onslaught of winter bring. Last winter there wasn't much snow, so the hassle of maneuvering around in the white slush was nil. But the winter before, it was extremely hard to get around because there were sheets of ice everywhere. The ice came from snow compacted by cars driving over it, and the snow was there because the single university snow plow can't lower its blade and run it into potholes.

Filling the potholes eliminates the problem temporarily, but eventually the condition of the lots as a whole must be addressed. Hopefully the Parking Committee begins to consider which lots can be paved now, and what will have to be saved until the long-range plan goes into effect. But they can't do that if they aren't meeting on a regular basis.

Everyone who drives a car to UMSL is affected, not just the students. Faculty and staff members have to drive over potholes, too, so they should be equally concerned about these conditions. We are all affected by the Parking Committee, so we urge the committee to accept its responsibility and begin working toward improving our unacceptable parking lot situation.

American, UMSL and NACTA officials say they are all hoping to see the situation resolved quickly.

"It's always been my feeling that it is in the best interest of both UMSL and the community to have an access studio on campus," Fay said. "Hopefully the outcome will be resolved and we'll have the studio."

Crawford agrees. "Eventually UMSL will get the studio," he said. "Unfortunately, it's the UMSL students and our subscribers who have suffered, because we haven't been able to provide the access studio and the programming we'd like them to have."

lettersResponds to peace letter

Dear Editor:

I am writing this letter as a response to the Plea for Peace letter run last week. I have a few comments which I would like to make.

I think that Miss Weir's challenge of a mutually verifiable freeze between the Russians and the United States is a little bit unrealistic. Does she really believe that a country which initially denied shooting down a passenger airliner would honestly and voluntarily agree to such a thing?

And even if they would agree to it I have serious doubts about their keeping their end of the bargain. (If we did and they didn't, then where would we be? We wouldn't be in the United States anymore because there wouldn't be any more United States.)

True — a mutually verifiable freeze would be consistent with the true concept of peace — but why would a country with a militarily oriented economy desire to bring about the true concept of peace?

As for her other challenge — I agree. I think that working for peace in our hearts and in our relationships here at UMSL is one of the best ideas I've heard expressed in a long time.

Granted, we don't have fistfights in the Quadrangle or riots in the Commons, but there is violence and hostility in our hearts here on campus. This is evident in the multitude of infantile scribbles which you can find on most restroom walls on campus.

These violent, bigoted attacks on our fellow students and friends are uncalled for and show a complete lack of respect for our fellow human beings. If we can't be courteous and respectful to ourselves, why should we expect anyone else to be?

Hopefully Miss Weir's challenge will be heard by one and all on campus. With a little effort that challenge can be met and possibly even rub off on members of our families and our friends off campus. It has to start somewhere, and with the grace of God, maybe our working for peace here may someday spread to the rest of the world, in order that a mutually verifiable freeze can become not only a possibility, but a reality.

Sincerely
Michael J. Stone

The UMSL School of Optometry has been chosen as the most outstanding optometry school in the nation for 1982-83.

The plaque was presented to UMSL by the National Optometric Association for excellence in recruiting and retaining minority students. NOA is an association composed of black and minority optometrists.

"I feel very good about the award," said Jerry Christensen, dean of the optometry school. "It is an important action. It is especially good, given the fact that we are only in our fourth year of operation."

Christensen said the award was won probably by the recruiting program headed by David Davidson, associate dean of optometry at UMSL. In this program, Davidson and two UMSL optometry professors, James DeClue and Paula Newsome, visited 10 predominately black colleges and universities to recruit students. The group worked mainly through health career administrators in order to inform students about what is available at the UMSL optometry school.

Also as part of its recruiting and retention efforts, the optometry school held a workshop prior to the opening of school this semester to help optometry students fit into the professional world. Money for the recruitment efforts was provided, in part, by the Health Career Op-

Christensen said that DeClue and Newsome, both black optometrists, were sent with Davidson as role models for the black students they were recruiting.

"This is very important to black students. Role models have more of a psychological impact," Christensen said. "These people would go and tell what this profession is all about and why it is a good thing to pursue."

In the area of retaining minority students, Christensen said that the optometry school provides a good tutorial service which "provides fast help when the first sign of difficulty arises."

The school of optometry has 121 students enrolled in its four-year graduate program. Of these students, four are black. Eighty-eight students are from Missouri and 33 are from out-state. Christensen acknowledged that the school does not have many minority students.

Recruiting efforts in the future will be similar to those being made now, he said. The school wants to maintain good contacts with universities and let them know that the UMSL optometry school exists, Christensen said.

"We were very fortunate to get the award this year," he said. "We will continue recruiting at other universities because this is one thing a new school must do."

STILL AND WHO? The first "Comedy Improv at the Summit" will take place tomorrow night, with the comedy team of Still and Max doing the honors.

Comedy Improv to premiere Friday

"Comedy Improv at the Summit" will make its debut tomorrow evening at 8 p.m. in the Summit lounge, located in the University Center. Well-known comedy acts will perform in the Summit on the first Friday of each month.

The program originated from the success of the hypnotist Tom DeLuca, who performed last semester at UMSL in a night club setting in the Summit lounge. DeLuca sold out and was a big success.

The Improv show will carry the same format, one that is very different from the traditional entertainment approach used at UMSL.

Ventriloquist Jimmy Still and his sidekick Max will headline the premiere tomorrow evening. Still and Max have opened for such greats as Bob Hope, Liberace and Bill Cosby. Also on the bill for tomorrow are magician Randy Kalin, an UMSL alumnus who will break the ice for Canadian singer-songwriter Peter Mathieson. Mathieson has performed with such entertainers as Jose Feliciano and Steve Martin.

Other acts booked for later in the semester include St. Louis comedian Al Canal and comedians from the Golden-

Author says television is diminishing childhood

Linda Belford
assistant features/arts editor

It was a celebration of life and learning last Saturday at McCluer North High School as several hundred people, mostly teachers, gathered to exchange ideas at the 15th annual "Crucial Early Years" conference sponsored by UMSL.

The overall air was one of enthusiasm and eagerness to improve teaching skills as teachers attended a wide array of workshops, all having to do with experiences in the elementary school.

The workshops (reading, music, art, science, math, computers, how to cope with stress, and storytelling to name only some) were split into four hour-long sessions so that a person could attend two in the morning and two in the afternoon with a break in between for lunch. The keynote address was given before the workshops began by Neil Postman, professor of communications arts and sciences, New York University. The only problem seemed to be deciding which four of the 28 workshops to attend. All in all, it was a very well-received and worthwhile conference.

Postman, author of 14 books, gave the keynote address at the conference. Postman talked about his latest book, "The Disappearance of Childhood," in which he states that the concept of childhood is disappearing due in a large way to television.

"Television," he said, "forces the entire culture to come out of the closet." By this Postman means what were once "adult secrets," social, political and sexual behaviors, to be learned in time as one got older and psychologically mature, are now accessible to children just by turning on the TV.

According to Postman, it was the printing press which created childhood. "With the outgrowth of literacy in the 16th century, people had to read in order to learn religion, science and literature, and since people aren't biologically programmed to read, TV promotes the idea that everything is available to everyone. Once we understand the principles of TV, we can deal with it for what it is — entertainment.

the young had to be separated from the community and taught how to read and function as adults. Childhood, then, became synonymous with school attendance."

But TV has become the "great equalizer." Postman said its viewing population can be broken into three categories: infancy, senility, and 20- to 30-year-olds, people who stay in that mentality until "dotage descends."

Because it is essentially a non-linguistic medium, TV cannot be a serious form of communication, he said. Television requires no special skills to grasp its form. "When people watch TV," he said, "they're seeing a rapid series of pictures — about 1,200 different shots per hour lasting approximately 3.5 seconds. This requires no analysis. You're no better today at watching TV today than you were five or 10 years ago." For this reason, Postman believes there's no such thing as "children's programs." "Charlie's Angels" is as sophisticated as "Sesame Street," he said.

"Once you realize there can be no character development, no serious conveyance of ideas, TV becomes less obnoxious," he said. He gave an example: "You know what 'Charlie's Angels' is about? Hair. That's all it's about — hair. Next time you watch it, count the number of times the Angels flip their head from one side to another. The camera is actually slowed down so the audience can appreciate the sensuousness." Postman says that once we understand the principles of TV, we can deal with it for what it is — entertainment.

But we're paying a high price for this entertainment. Between 11:30 p.m. and 2 a.m. 2 million children a year are watching TV, and because the images are so short, children's attention spans decrease. This makes it hard for teachers to hold kids' attention for any sustained length of time. "Teachers have to act like television commercials," said Postman. "Entertainment and learning have become indistinguishable."

Everywhere we can see the effects of TV. It's what Postman calls "The Gary Coleman Syndrome." Eleven-year-olds wear three-piece suits and 60-year-olds wear jeans. The language, dress, sexuality and interests of children are no longer seen as different from those of adults because television promotes the desirable person as the adult/child, someone who gets by with instant gratification and an unhealthy amount of narcissism, he said.

TV promotes the idea that everything is available to everyone, including sex. "It's a product," said Postman, "like mouthwash or underarm deodorant, to be had by everyone including kids who don't understand its meaning." TV reveals and trivializes everything. The subject matter of the confessional and the psychiatrist's office are now in the public's domain. "Everyday," said Postman, "kids see vivid images of adult failure and madness."

Without a clear concept of childhood, Postman says we can't have one of adulthood either. He uses as an example the commercial for dishwashing liquid where we're supposed to guess who's the mother and who's the daughter. "It's commercials like this that tell us it's not OK to look older." So kids get a distorted view of the older generation, and the older generation gets a distorted view of the younger generation, he said. Postman said many kids are sexually abused today because they are viewed as adults. "Adults are not conceptualizing them as kids anymore," he said.

Homecoming plans underway; 18 vie for royalty

Plans for UMSL's 1983 Homecoming have been finalized, according to chairman Bob Kent.

A dance is scheduled for Friday, Oct. 14, in the Chip Room of the Carpenter's Hall at 1401 Hampton Ave. The dance will run from 8 p.m. to midnight; tickets are $5 per person and are available at the Information Desk and at the door.

The theme of the dance, in accordance with UMSL's 20th anniversary, is "Happy Anniversary."

Kent said that there will be no float competition or parade this year. Judging from last year's homecoming, Kent said, "There didn't seem to be a lot of interest in that sort of thing."

Postman

According to Postman, the idea of children embodies a vision of the future. "TV," he said, "has no visions of the future or the past. It is totally present-centered, and it amplifies the present out of all proportions." If childhood goes, Postman believes, we will move back into the medieval mentality from which literacy freed us. He says he could be wrong about all this, but he doubts it.

Stadium to be dedicated

Daniel A. Kimack
sports editor

UMSL Athletic Director Chuck Smith, knowing soccer crowds have been sparse so far this season for both the men's and women's soccer games, has extended a challenge to each UMSL student.

He is daring every learner to come out and watch the UMSL soccer games Tuesday evening from the nearly-completed soccer stadium, and to join in the evening's events.

It's not a difficult challenge, but it is one that hasn't been fulfilled this year, last year, the year before...

An appropriation of $290,000 by the special session of the 1982 Missouri legislature made the project feasible, and with construction in the finishing-touch stage, a dedication is the rule of order.

The dedication ceremonies will be part of a list of activities that evening, including both men's and women's games against Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville, an Alumni Night, which will feature the 1973 National Championship men's soccer team, and the dedication itself.

Expected to be on hand for the ceremonies are Sens. James Murphy and Edwin L. Dirck (both of whom spearheaded the stadium's construction), Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman, Smith, and UMSL soccer coaches Ken Hudson and Don Dallas.

When completed, the new stadium will consist of permanent seating for 1,300 spectators, restroom facilities, drinking fountains, a press box, and improved lighting and electrical equipment. From the outset, completion was projected for October 9, and barring bad weather, things will run on schedule.

But, according to Smith, the stadium isn't just something pretty to look at and sit in. It is expected not only to help the soccer program, but the entire university as well.

"We have to feel nice about the stadium," Smith said. "It's going to attract spectators. First, everyone will be able to find a seat, and secondly, there will always be good seating."

Smith also explained that UMSL was, "just about the only university in Missouri without good seating facilities."

And the feelings among athletic staff members are more positive these days. The stadium is figured to help out as a recruiting tool, showing young UMSL prospects the only stadium of its stature in the state.

"It's now a first-class stadium," Smith said. "It promotes a better image of the university."

"We can now hold high school days, senior days, and so forth. The stadium has the capabilities of drawing more students to UMSL."

Dedication ceremonies will be preceded by the Riverwomen's soccer game against Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville, starting at 5:30 p.m.

The Rivermen will follow up the dedication with a game against the men Cougars in a 7:45 p.m. contest. Both UMSL and the Cougars are looking for a big win in the game, as both have been struggling in the early going.

During halftime of the men's game, the 1973 UMSL national championship men's soccer team will be honored. The event is a celebration of Alumni Night, and is being held in conjunction with the 20th anniversary celebration.

The 1973 soccer squad is the only national champions the school has ever had, as they defeated the California State University-Fullerton team 3-0 in the championship game of the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division 2 soccer playoffs.

For the year, the men posted a record of 11-0-3, and outscored their opponents 39-12. And not so ironically, the Riverwomen soccer coach of 1983, Ken Hudson, was part of that national championship team.

"It's nice the university is going to do something like this," Hudson said. "More than likely, all 26 members of that team will be on hand."

For the UMSL athletic department, the evening of events is being billed as a soccer extravaganza. And Chuck Smith speaks for all parties involved when he challenges the students to be on hand

Women win SIU-E tourney, Hudson not content

Daniel A. Kimack
sports editor

You would never know by looking at the Riverwomen's record of 7-1-1, but Ken Hudson's women kickers are experiencing some mid-season difficulties.

The women, ranked fifth nationally, took part in the Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville Tournament this past weekend. And although they were tourney champs, Hudson says not everything is peaches and cream.

"We don't have the killer instinct yet," Hudson said. "We keep letting our opponents off the hook."

Hudson was referring to, in part, the tournament's championship game in which the Riverwomen held a 2-0 halftime lead. Everything seemed rosy, right?

Wrong — the SIU-E team charged back in the second stanza with its first goal, and almost tied things up late in the game but an off-sides call prevented the tying score.

"We need to start putting some teams away early," Hudson said. "We haven't done that this season and we need to start."

Actually, the women kickers should have disposed of SIU-E, and first-round opponent University of Missouri-Rolla, rather handily. Neither of the teams is nationally ranked, and neither was expected to burden the Riverwomen.

"It wasn't supposed to be a tough weekend for us," Hudson said. "We played well enough to win, but we still need to improve."

In first-round action, the Riverwomen dominated the Miners in regulation time, allowing no shots on goal. The women in the red and gold pummeled the Miners net with 40 shots, but the great play of Rolla's goalkeeper shutout the Riverwomen in both halves.

The game went into overtime, but the first 10-minute period was again dominated by defense. The Miners hadn't made a single shot, again.

In the second overtime period, UMR, found its offensive force. On what would turn out to be Rolla's only shot of the contest, Janet Stones beat goalkeeper Ruth Harker at 104:43.

"We made a mental mistake in the backfield," Hudson said. "They went long on our off-sides trap and shot a ball through Harker's hands. She didn't see the ball, and the official didn't call the offsides."

Down 1-0, however, the Riverwomen came back with three goals to win the game, a game in which they outshot their challenger 45-1.

At 106:12, Joan Gettemeyer scored from a Karen Guelker pass to even things up. A corner kick by Jan Gettemeyer set up Theresa Nappier's head ball for a goal at 108:04, giving the Riverwomen a lead they never gave up.

The Miners helped the Riverwomen cause, though, as the UMR defense cleared a ball into its own net with just 13 seconds left to play.

"Rolla's goalkeeper played an outstanding game," Hudson said. "Many of our shots were on goal, but she caught a lot of them. She was out of this world."

UMSL outshot the opponent considerably, held the advantage in corner kicks, 10-1, and were out-fouled 11-6.

The "killer instinct," however did not surface until the latter part of the second overtime period. And in the SIU-E game, the killer instinct disappeared after the first half.

In the championship game, Jan Gettemeyer touched in sister Joan's free kick at 15:07 for the early lead. Things were going good for UMSL as the team was playing strong defense, and tireless offense. The Gettemeyers teamed up again in the first half as Joan fed Jan with a give-and-go for the Riverwomen's second tally.

That was about all that pleased Hudson, though, as the Riverwomen found themselves strug-

Bud tourney next stop

The Rivermen soccer team will host the UMSL Budweiser Classic this weekend, with play beginning tomorrow evening and resuming Saturday evening with the consolation game and the finals.

Four teams will participate in the tournament: UMSL, Southwest Missouri State and Missouri Southern universities and Benedictine College.

First-round action will see Benedicting opposing Missouri Southern at 5:30 p.m. and UMSL against Southwest Missouri State at 7:30 p.m.

The consolation game is at 5:30 p.m. Saturday, with the championship game played at 7:30 p.m. that evening.

Rivermen's Tournament streak in trouble

Daniel A. Kimack
sports editor

The UMSL men's soccer team blasphemed its string of 11 straight National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament bids last Saturday, losing to Northeast Missouri State University 3-2 in overtime.

The intraconference loss was the first for Coach Don Dallas' Rivermen in three years, and he knows the effects will be adverse.

Seeking a 12th consecutive tournament appearance, Dallas said the loss not only hurts the kickers' chances of repeating as Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association champs, but it also hurts the chances of an anonymous bid.

The MIAA race held the Rivermen as favorites this year, as the men have gone undefeated in the conference the past two years.

The University of Missouri-Rolla was expected to be UMSL's stiffest competition this season, and the Rivermen have yet to challenge the Miners. A victory in that matchup is essential if the men kickers hope to repeat as conference champs.

The loss to NEMO was almost a shocker (almost, because the Rivermen have yet to show consistency in 1983), as the Bulldogs came in with a record of 2-5 overall, 0-1 in the conference. UMSL had plans of using Northeast as a stepping stone for its conference hopes, but, "Northeast wanted the game more than we did," Dallas said.

NEMO opened up the scoring in the contest at 78 minutes, 6 seconds, when forward Don Basler beat UMSL goalkeeper Scott Graham's left side with a rocket.

UMSL knotted things up just four minutes later as midfielder Mike Pieri knocked home a head ball at 82:35, assisted by forward John O'Mara. Almost three minutes later, John Pallet scored an unassisted goal at 84:27 to put the Rivermen in a short-lived lead.

"You just don't lose a 2-1 lead when you come back in a game," Dallas said unknowingly.

Much to the chagrin of their coach, the Rivermen inadvertently left Steve Schlichtig unmarked, and he headed in the tying goal with just over five minutes left in the contest.

The overtime period was decided in just three minutes as NEMO backfielder Dan Hogan scored an unassisted goal on a break-away at 92:41.

The loss drops the Rivermen's record to 5-4-0, overall, and 1-1-0 in the conference.

"We moved the ball better in the second half," Dallas said. "There were just too many opportunities missed. If you keep missing opportunities, you keep them in the game."

Dallas confided that the Rivermen went into the game looking ahead of the Bulldogs, and admits that the men kickers learned their lesson — the hard way.

UMSL will have to wait until Oct. 27 to face the Miners, and to stay in contention for an MIAA championship, the game is a must-win.

The Rivermen are now in a three-way tie in the MIAA race as Northeast, Southeast Missouri State University and UMSL are all 1-1 in the conference. Rolla has yet to compete in conference play.

How much the loss to NEMO has hurt the Rivermen season isn't known just yet, "but we'll see in the next few games," Dallas said.

Shining light brightens dull volleyball season

Kurt Jacob

There may be a way out after all. Just when it seemed like there was no relief in sight for the Women volleyballers, a glimmer of light shone upon them.

This glimmer of light came in the way of a couple of victories and a respectable showing in UMSL's own Invitational Tournament last weekend. UMSL won two of four matches and finished in the upper half of the 12 team affair.

Good news has been scarce for the Riverwomen this season, but last weekend was an exception.

TKE, NCFT, Grave Diggers in front

Ken Eckert
assistant sports editor

With intramural football having entered the second half of the season, TKE, NCFT, and the Grave Diggers are leading in their respective divisions.

In Division I last Thursday TKE beat Sig Tau 8-0, while Sig Pi topped Pikes 6-0, in make-up games. Tuesday TKE and Sig Tau both won easily with TKE over Sig Pi 18-0 and Sig Tau over Pikes 20-0. In this division TKE leads with three wins, no losses and a tie, followed by Sig Tau at 3-1-0, Sig Pi at 1-3-0 and Pikes at 0-3-1. Tuesday Pikes face Sig Pi at 2 p.m. and Sig Tau faces TKE at 3 p.m.

In Division II last Thursday all teams were idle. This past Tuesday however, Papal Lions held

After downing a relatively weak Fontbonne College team in impressive fashion on Friday evening 15-3, 15-9, UMSL took on Drury College.

As it turned out, UMSL had a chance to have quite an impressive tourney with Drury being an early obstacle for the Riverwomen. Unfortunately, the Drury game put the netters against a wall — a wall that UMSL helped build with mistakes. These same mistakes have plagued the netters all season.

"We had the lead again in both games," Coach Cindy Rech said, "but we just didn't push hard enough. We did play more together and with more confidence but the little things killed us again."

Drury recorded the 15-11, 15-11 win.

On Saturday, UMSL faced another obstacle in Depauw University from Greencastle, Ind. Depauw had lost its first two matches and was looking to salvage a victory against the hosts.

But thanks to the play of sophomore hitter Lisa Plamp and senior Karen Davis, it wasn't to be, and UMSL got past Depauw with an overpowering 15-5, 15-12 sweep.

Plamp, playing perhaps her best tournament of her young college career, helped stabilized the hitting and blocking game.

This made the job for the rest of the UMSL squad easier.

"Lisa played very aggressively," Rech said, "especially defensively. She did a great job of blocking."

"We need her to play like that consistently. She's in an important position so when she plays well, it makes a huge difference."

Davis, who is still not back to full strength, is at "full mind" according to Rech, which is quite an asset for the young UMSL team.

"Karen is so tough mentally," Rech said, "and this rubs off on the rest of us. She really helps keep us together on the court."

Against the Mississippi College for Women, UMSL was without Julie Chrespi, a starting setter for the netters. Chrespi suffered a wrist injury earlier in the tournament. Davis replaced her and after a couple of position adjustments on the court, Rech's crew was ready for action.

Both teams played pretty evenly but costly errors by the Riverwomen in clutch situations proved to be their downfall. Mississippi came out on top 15-13, 15-10.

"Serving errors have hurt us all year," Rech said, "and this tournament was no exception."

"Our service receive was disappointing also and we work on that over and over in practice. I don't understand what happens in the matches, we just don't handle it like we should."

"I'm pretty critical though. When I sit back and think about it, I realize we played pretty well."

The tournament provided a bright spot in an otherwise dark season for UMSL. Who knows? Maybe this is an indication of things to come.

With the Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association conference tournament on the agenda this weekend, it will have to be if the Riverwomen are to resurrect their season.

UMSL notes: The six-team round-robin tournament will begin in the Mark Twain Gym at 7 p.m. Friday night and resume action again on Saturday at 12:30 p.m. glings to maintain their 2-0 lead. SIU-E forward Mary Bisch scored the Cougars lone goal at 79:31, after beating UMSL goalkeeper Sue Latham with a rebound shot.

Just minutes later, the off-sides call drained the Cougars of all hope to score an upset over the UMSL women. The Cougars have won only one game this season, but they gave the Riverwomen all they could handle.

"We came out tired in the second half," Hudson said. "We haven't had a weekend off for some time."

The women were scheduled to face Quincy College last night, and have no games on tap this weekend.

"We need the break," Hudson said. "We're all pretty tired."

So, for this weekend, Hudson will concentrate on regaining that "killer instinct" for his Riverwomen. Maybe the time off will help the women kickers regroup and put some teams away early.

But for now, "I'm going to pick some apples," Hudson said. Perhaps the adventure will ripen the women's soccer squad.

Northeast puts Rivermen six feet under

Jeff Kuchno
sports columnist

Please, somebody take those shovels away from the UMSL men's soccer team. The hole the players are digging for themselves is getting just a bit too deep.

Of course, the Rivermen probably wish they had a hole to jump into after last Saturday's debacle against lightly regarded Northeast Missouri State University. The visitors from Kirksville, aided by a partisan Northeast Missouri State crowd, played as if their masculinity was at stake and pulled off the unthinkable, stunning the Rivermen, 3-2.

It was a painful loss for the Rivermen, not because it was their first ever in the Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association (evidently a rapidly growing soccer conference), but because it lessened their chances of qualifying for post-season play for a record 12th consecutive year. Teams that lose to also-rans usually pack it in after the regular season.

Granted, the Rivermen have plenty of time to make amends for Saturday's loss, but this was one they surely didn't want to blow. The loss, which dropped UMSL's record to 5-4 on the season and ended its stranglehold on first place in the conference standings, was incredibly embarrassing. Considering UMSL has been to the final four national tournament more years than NEMO has been playing soccer and has outscored NEMO 16-1 in winning all four previous meetings between the two clubs, it's hard to fathom UMSL losing to this fledgling team. On paper, UMSL is easily the best squad.

On the field, though, Northeast Missouri State begs to differ. In Saturday's match, Northeast played with enough intensity to last a whole season, capitalized on its scoring chances, and covered up for its errors, which were few. The Rivermen, on the other hand, played as if their opponents were in fourth grade, failed to cash in on numerous scoring opportunities and committed several costly mistakes. Add it all up, and those are the ingredients of an upset.

"This was one of our most disappointing losses ever," said

UMSL's Don Dallas, who has coached the Rivermen since the program began in 1968. "They just wanted it more than we did. We learned that you have to be up for every game. It's a hard way to get that lesson."

Hopefully, it will turn out to be the best lesson UMSL will receive this year. The Rivermen have made the 1983 season a tremendous success for Northeast Missouri State, and the ghost of Saturday night's loss will haunt them for the remainder of the year. In order to bounce back, they must recover from a rash of injuries — not physically, that is, but emotionally. Every player on the team is suffering from a severe case of bruised pride. The cure, though, is simple — a win.

UMSL's character, whatever it is, will be put to the test in the next few weeks. The Rivermen can't afford to lose many more, which will be hard to avoid with such foes as Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville, University of Missouri-Rolla and Quincy College still ahead on the schedule.

UMSL can get by probably with one more loss, maybe two, but that's it. A win over Rolla, which is in the same Division 2 region with UMSL and its closest competitor in the MIAA, is imperative if the Rivermen are to garner a post-season bid.

Perhaps the Rivermen will start to put it together this coming week when they host the UMSL Budweiser Classic this weekend and perennial power SIU-Edwardsville on Tuesday, Oct. 11. The latter game will be highlighted by the official opening and dedication of the newly constructed soccer stadium, and a rather large crowd is expected to sit in on this battle between the two area rivals.

UMSL needs a top-drawer performance against SIU-Edwardsville in order to build confidence. But it won't be easy. UMSL pushed aside SIU last year with an exciting 2-1 win, which should add fuel to the SIU machine when it arrives here next Tuesday. The hungry Cougars will be looking for revenge, and it's likely they'll get it.

Remember that the Rivermen surprised SIU three years ago with a 2-1 triumph, only to watch the Cougars pound them into the ground one year later with a 4-0 win. Thus, if recent history repeats itself, UMSL will lose — and lose badly.

Tradition, though, didn't amount to a hill of beans when UMSL lost to Northeast Missouri State. Perhaps turnabout is fair play after all.
